1994 Nonfiction Winner: How We Die Reflections on Life's Final Chapter

By Sherwin B. Nuland

Read by Ed Blake

In hopes of removing mystery from dying and making it less frightening a Yale medical professor explains the biological and clinical aspects of death. He describes six causes of death he asserts to be representative of universal processes, portrays patients, and muses about care and dignity. The examples are heart attack, Alzheimer's disease, murder, AIDS, cancer, and old age. Bestseller. Nat'l Book Award. 1993.

1994 Poetry Winner: Worshipful Company of Fletchers Poems By James Tate

Read by Arnie Warren

Reading time 1 hour, 28 minutes

Prosaic images, such as "the cushions on the wicker couch need mending," form a backdrop for a poem about children telling ghost stories. Sometimes Tate weaves such ordinary objects as gumwrappers, liberty dimes, and Indian-head pennies into his poems. And as he focuses on the creative process, he is amused by thoughts of others solemnly organizing his personal things. Winner of the National Book Award.

1993 Nonfiction Winner: United States Essays: 1952-1992 By Gore Vidal

Read by Rick Foucheux

Reading time 56 hours, 15 minutes

Selected literary, political, and personal essays published over forty years. The title refers to Vidal's assessment of the state of the art of writing, the state of the union, and the state of his opinions about life in general. Nothing is immune. Not even the bestseller list can escape his observations, and his work has appeared on it more than once. He writes about sex and the American public and a myriad of topics in between.

1993 Poetry Winner: Garbage by A. R. Ammons

Read by Barrett Whitener Reading time 1 hours, 57 minutes

National Book Award-winning book-length poem in which the author uses garbage as an emblem for all kinds of refuse. Ammons often personalizes his confrontation and ponders the power of poetry to make a difference in dealing with waste. He divides his extended meditation into eighteen sections, each division a "catch-your-breath moment" before his argument continues.

1992 Poetry Winner: New and Selected Poems By Mary Oliver

Read by Suzanne Toren

Reading time 2 hours, 37 minutes

The author of the 1984 Pulitzer Prize-winning American Primitive (RC 21493) was honored with the National Book Award for this volume containing poems written over nearly three decades. Oliver's poems frequently question how to love this world. Although most pay tribute to nature, some investigate human existence, expressing the need to experience life so that one does not "end up simply having visited this world." Nat'l Book Award.

1991 Winner: What Work is Poems By Philip Levine

Read by Gillian Wilson

Reading time 1 hours, 45 minutes

This volume won the 1991 Los Angeles Times Book Award for poetry. It is a collection celebrating the American worker, in which Levine explores the inner life of unsung heroes in unglamorous surroundings doing thankless jobs. He sees them living "at the borders of dreams," sustained by thoughts that "the day was ending," and examining "the faces on the bus, some going to work and some coming back."
