

Using the 1852 California State Census in the California History Room

The first federal census conducted in California was taken in 1850, while the Gold Rush was in full swing. Adventurers were pouring into the state, and they were very mobile in their search for the next paydirt. As a result, the accuracy of the count was questionable. Also, records for the counties of Contra Costa, San Francisco, and Santa Clara were lost or destroyed.

To obtain a more reliable picture of the population, the State of California conducted its own census in 1852, the only one in the state's history. The original census is housed at the State Archives, but it is available on microfilm in the California History Room. Because the microfilm is difficult to read, the Daughters of the American Revolution of California created a transcription of the census, as well as an index. The California History Room has both print and microfilm copies of the transcription.

- Electronic index to the 1852 California census (Southern California Genealogical Society). On the genealogy computer in the California History Room.
- Original census microfilm, M/F 144. Request reels at the Information Desk. Filmed by the Genealogical Society, Salt Lake City. Some parts are difficult to read, and the film lacks the following counties: Colusa, Sutter, Marin.
