The Informate project, funded by a California State Library federal Library Services and Technology Act grant award, is enabling Oceanside’s Latino community to become comfortable with using the OPL online library catalog, Microsoft® Word, and finding information on the Internet.

In a February 1999 door-to-door survey of 500 households in the Oceanside Latino community, residents were asked questions about their knowledge of computers, the Internet, and information technology, in general. Called the “Partners for Healthy Neighborhoods Project,” this survey used neighborhood residents to find out the needs of the Latino community, which makes up 28 percent of the entire population of Oceanside. The results of this survey, along with an internal Oceanside Public Library survey, formed the basis of an innovative Oceanside Public Library (OPL) program called Informate: Computadoras Para tu Futuro (“Inform Yourself: Computers for Your Future”). The survey results showed that 66 percent of those surveyed wanted the library to offer computer instruction classes, and to make them available in their neighborhoods. Ninety-three percent of those surveyed also wanted instruction on using the Internet.

Bilingual trainers created materials on basic computer skills, using the OPL catalog and searching the Internet in Spanish, and took these materials along with their training prowess out to three library branches in the Latino community. Class attendance was high in these classes, with many individuals repeating classes and attending regularly for additional practice.

One of the more innovative and interesting aspects of this project happened unexpectedly. Many of the mothers attending the training classes brought along their children. During the training sessions between January and March 2000, 119 children under 14 attended classes with their parents. Also, the trainers discovered that over 90 percent of the Informate students were mothers with children. The trainers quickly learned of the need to provide daycare for their students! So, they scheduled one of the seven weekly classes in OPL’s Children’s Department during the library’s Spanish Language preschool storyline called “Cuentos Para Ti” (Stories for You). The mothers received computer instruction while their children were attending the storyline. In other classes, the instructors set aside an area for children and supplied these areas with toys, games, children’s books in Spanish, Lego blocks, coloring pages, and other activities to keep the children quiet while their mothers learned how to use computers. Library teachers also noticed that children became interested in computers after watching their mothers in class. Rather than frown on this, Informate project staff had mothers and children working together both in English and Spanish as they explored popular children’s websites such as funbrain.com and funschool.com.

According to Deborah Polich, assistant library director at Oceanside Public Library and Informate project coordinator, this project has benefited the Latino community, including:

- a young woman who received a promotion and salary raise at her workplace because she learned to use computers
- a woman who learned to use computers through Informate and became one of the computer class mentors for other community members taking the computer instruction classes. She has become an English as a Second Language (ESL) teaching assistant in a local community college.
- a woman who became confident enough to enter a Regional Occupational Program (ROP) after taking the computer instruction classes.

Polich also mentioned that although the federal funding has ended for this project, an exciting opportunity has arisen where OPL will be...
Arroyo Seco, Heartland, Sierra Valley and Tierra del Sol submit plans to become regional networks

Arroyo Seco, Heartland, Sierra Valley, and Tierra del Sol, the remaining four Library of California (LoC) planning regions, have submitted their regional library network applications for the LoC board to consider at its November 2000 meeting in Santa Clara. If approved, these four planning regions will become operating regional library networks under LoC beginning January 1, 2001, with state-funded member benefits for the participating libraries within each regional library network to commence no sooner than January 1, 2001.

As with Cascade Pacific, Gold Coast, and Golden Gateway regional library networks, which the LoC board approved at its August 2000 meeting, it has been a formidable task putting together the required information before the application can be submitted to the LoC board. The application must include an organizational structure, bylaws, membership policies, a long-range plan, endorsement of charter members of the region, and geographic contiguity. ¹

“We made a commitment to get the organizational structure in place as quickly as possible,” said Diana Paque, LoC director, “so we could do what the Library of California is meant to do: support improved library services to Californians through resource sharing. We are now ready to do that.”

Following is a list of the four LoC planning region names and the counties they represent:

- Arroyo Seco (Los Angeles, Orange)
- Heartland (Fresno, Kern, Kings, Madera, Mariposa, Tulare)
- Sierra Valley (Alpine, Amador, Calaveras, El Dorado, Merced, Mono, Nevada, Placer, Sacramento, San Joaquin, Stanislaus, Sutter, Tuolumne, Yolo, Yuba)
- Tierra del Sol (Imperial, Inyo, Riverside, San Bernardino, San Diego)

For general information on the regional library networks see the LoC website at www.library.ca.gov/loc/regional/index.html. For further information, contact Diana Paque, Library of California director, at (916) 653-7183, or by email at dpaque@library.ca.gov.

¹For more detailed information about the legal requirements for becoming a regional library network under LoC, see the August issue of Connection, page 1.

contracting with other local agencies to provide Informate-type computer instruction. Also, community resource centers outside of the library are being investigated as possible locations for additional computer instruction classes for Latino residents. There are also plans to make the Spanish language instructional materials developed by the Informate project available on the OPL website sometime in the near future.

This project was supported in whole or in part by the U.S. Institute of Museum and Library Services under the provisions of the Library Services and Technology Act, administered in California by the state librarian.

What’s a statewide resource library?

The Statewide Resource Libraries program under Library of California (LoC) took a positive step forward on October 11 as library directors and librarians from the State Library as well as the largest academic and public libraries in the state met in Sacramento to begin defining the role these libraries could play under LoC.

According to the LoC Act, the Statewide Resource Library Group, defined in section 18810 of the Act as “those libraries in California that have the most comprehensive or specialized resources, or both, in topics needed by people statewide or regionally and that agree to provide access to their resources to all members of all regional library networks.”

For the major resource libraries, the LoC Act and regulations do not include any specific language defining resource libraries, specifying which California libraries can be categorized as resource libraries, or what responsibilities these libraries will have under LoC.

Participants in this planning session discussed this issue and the value of the major resource libraries in becoming involved with the Statewide Resource Library group program. They also expressed concerns about the unpredictability of the LoC budget; the need for clarification about what the regional resource libraries’ responsibilities are versus those of the statewide resource libraries; and the potential burden on statewide resource libraries from all of the LoC regional library networks.

Under the guidance of Diana Paque, LoC director, and facilitator Betty Parks, these issues were openly discussed. Small groups divided by LoC region to examine possible program elements that participants would like to see in this LoC program. There seemed to be general consensus that of paramount importance would be the working out of an organizational infrastructure that defines resource libraries, protocols for providing and using services, communication and planning mechanisms for the program, among others. Under this approach, instead of a uniform category called “resource library,” the LoC would first define programs such as Interlibrary Loan (ILL), 24/7 reference, preservation centers, subject/language collections, for example, and define the types of users within each of these programs, and what resource library services and/or resources would be needed.

The participants agreed to move forward with this program. As recommended, a steering group is being formed to draft definitions, tasks, and mechanisms to formulate a resource library infrastructure. Additionally, it will propose some pilot or model resource library programs and begin defining criteria for participation, measurement units for each program, and funding levels needed for these programs.

For further information, contact Diana Paque, Library of California director, at (916) 653-7183, or by email to dpaque@library.ca.gov.

Children and Youth Services listserv® now available

Communicating online about children and youth services has just become much easier for youth services staff, library directors, and anyone with an interest in children and youth services. The reason is “cys-talk-l,” a new children and youth services listserv® (i.e. electronic discussion group).1 “Cys-talk-l” will play a vital role in enabling youth services staff, library directors, and anyone interested in library service for youth and children to communicate electronically with each other.

“The children and youth services community has wanted a communication tool for a long time,” says Bessie Condos Tichauer, children and youth services consultant for the California State Library. “I am pleased that the state library has responded to this need.”

To subscribe to this electronic discussion group, do the following:

Address an email message to majordomo@ifp.infoplease.org; “subscribe cys-talk-l” in the body of the message. (Note: the last letter in cys-talk-l is a lower case letter “l,” not the number 1). For further information on cys-talk-l, contact Bessie Condos Tichauer, children and youth services consultant, California State Library, at (916) 653-8293, or by email to btichauer@library.ca.gov.

1Although “cys-talk-l” might be identified as a listserv®, the current Library of Congress subject heading, “electronic discussion group” describes it better. Besides being copyrighted, the term listserv® is limited to depicting the process of adding new email subscribers to a listserv and making sure all subscribers receive email messages sent to that list. It does not really describe electronic discussion per se.

Update from the California Center for the Book

Approximately 4,000 southern Californians attended “Bookmaking: Evolution from Stone to Paper” at the Thousand Oaks Public Library on Saturday, September 23. The event was sponsored by the California Center for the Book and the Ventura County Los Angeles Times. The all-day program included demonstrations of computer generated bookmaking, modern illumination, stone painting, hieroglyphics, chiseling in stone, bookmaking, calligraphy, and more. The center had a booth at which Natalie Cole and Dr. Sid Berger, the center’s staff, disseminated information about its activities. Berger also demonstrated the hand casting of 15th-century-style type.

The California Center for the Book has also sponsored a number of other excellent programs this fall. In October, audiences at the San Francisco and Los Angeles public libraries saw the world premieres of Women of Mystery: Three Writers Who Forever Changed Detective Fiction. The programs provided insights into the world of the mystery writer. They included an introduction by Charles Champlin, arts editor emeritus of the Times, the film screening, and a lively panel discussion featuring Champlin, mystery writers Sara Paretsky and Marcia Muller, and award-winning filmmakers Pamela Beere Briggs and William McDonald.

Throughout September and October, audiences around California enjoyed the Center’s Video Author Visits series. Sidney Sheldon was interviewed by Sidney Berger in Los Angeles, and audiences in Calexico, Plumas County, Palm Springs, and Woodland participated in the event via live interactive videoconferencing. Audiences in Los Angeles, Chico, Taft, and Woodland shared a program featuring Michael Cunningham. Audiences in Auburn, Imperial, and Mission Viejo enjoyed a video visit from Philip Margolin, who presented from KCET in Los Angeles.

San Diego Public Library is currently exhibiting the Center-sponsored “The Great Experiment: George Washington and the American Republic.” Programs at the library focusing on this exhibit include: African-Americans in the Revolutionary Experience, September 14th; George Washington: In His Own Words, September 27th; and Africans in America 1750-1805 Revolution, October 16th. Also at the San Diego Public Library, the reading-and-discussion program “Let’s Talk about It:” Discussions include: Looking Backward 2000-1887 (1888), October 5th; The Dispossessed: An Ambiguous Utopia, October 19th.

You can find out more about the California Center for the Book at CLA, Exhibits Booth 907, November 11-14, 2000. In addition, the Center is presenting “California Center for the Book and You,” Monday, November 13th, 9:30 a.m., at the conference.

The Video Author Visits project and the California Center for the Book were supported in whole or in part by the U.S. Institute of Museum and Library Services under the provisions of the Library Services and Technology Act, administered by the State Librarian.

For general information about the Video Author Visits project, see the September 2000 issue of Connection, page 6, or visit their website at www.videoauthorvisits.org. For information about the program, including how to become a video author site and how to get video-conferencing for your library, contact Al Bennett, library programs consultant, California State Library, at (916) 653-7743, or by email to abennett@library.ca.gov.

Correction to the October 2000 Connection

On Page 1 the article Librarians’ Index to the Internet: “By librarians, for everyone!” (Issue no. 4, October 2000) did not mention that the Library Services and Technology Act (LSTA), a federal grant program conducted by the Institute of Museum and Library Services (IMLS), funded the Librarians’ Index to the Internet (LII) as an independent project beginning October 1, 1997, and starting in1998-99 as part of LSTA funding for InFoPeople.

Contact Person for referendum information changes

For those libraries with a library-related initiative on the November ballot, the contact person in the Library Development Services (LDS) bureau has changed. The information should now be forwarded to Mark Parker, LDS bureau chief. Richard Hall, who collected this information before, is unable to do so since being appointed to his new position directing the Office of Library Construction. With the information libraries provide, an update of library ballot information can be provided following the election.

To send library ballot information, or for further information, contact Mark Parker, LDS Bureau Chief, at (916) 657-1892, or by email to mparker@library.ca.gov.

Bridges to Reading kits arrive at public libraries

Part of a new partnership between the California State Library (CSL) and the Schwab Foundation for Learning (SFL) has been the distribution of Bridges to Reading kits, which were devised to help a parent understand a child's reading difficulties and to help them overcome those difficulties.

These kits, valued at $25 apiece, were sent in early October to all California Literacy Campaign (CLC) programs at no cost. Inside each kit were cards that provided CLC programs the chance to order up to 10 additional kits for free, a contribution from SFL worth over $37,500 if all the additional kits are ordered. In addition, toward the end of October, one library edition of the kit was sent to each of 1,043 public library outlets for their circulating or reference collections. These additional kits, valued at $26,575, were also sent at no cost.

Designed to help literacy programs, volunteers, and/or parents, the Bridges to Reading kits contain specific information on a number of issues, including types of reading problems, how to identify and get help for a child's learning problems, and how to work with the schools to assure adequate support for the child.

In approximately three months, each site that has received a kit will receive a follow-up survey. The purpose of this survey is to find out how the kit has been used, what information in the kit has helped, and what else could have been included in the kit that would have made it more effective, especially for parents with limited literacy skills.

The CLC is a statewide literacy campaign comprising the California Library Literacy Services (CLLS) and Families For Literacy (FFL) programs. CLLS serves adults who have recognized difficulties with literacy, and FFL extends literacy services to families of those adults who have preschool age children. The CLC program is located in 104 public library jurisdictions at over 150 sites throughout California, and has more than 25,000 volunteer tutors serving approximately 30,000 adults and over 6,000 families each year.

Charles Schwab created the SFL because of his own and his son's experiences in dealing with being dyslexic. The philosophy of the SFL is that information about learning disabilities should be distributed as widely and freely as possible to heighten awareness about learning disabilities, and to help children be successful in life and in learning.

For general information about the Schwab Foundation for Learning, visit their website at www.schwablearning.org.

Sheila Thornton retires as SLS bureau chief at the State Library

Sheila Thornton, bureau chief for State Library Services (SLS), retired Friday, October 20, after 27 years of dedicated service to CSL. As SLS bureau chief, Thornton was responsible for administering most of the CSL library service programs, including the Acquisitions and Cataloging sections of Technical Services, the Government Publications Section (GPS), the Witkin State Law Library, State Information and Reference Center, Special Collections, the California History Section, the Sutro Library (located in San Francisco), Preservation, and the Braille and Talking Books Library.

Thornton began her CSL career as a principal librarian in 1973, followed by an appointment to chief of library services in 1975.

As bureau chief of SLS, Thornton played a key role in many major and innovative changes in CSL services and operations, including the design, procurement, and installation of BTBL’s automated circulation system in 1978; the relocation of the Sutro Library to its current site at San Francisco State University; the implementation of CSL’s integrated online catalog, circulation, and acquisitions system; and moving CSL’s general, law, and GPS collections to a remote facility so the CSL Library and Courts I building could be seismically retrofitted.

Besides her detailed knowledge of CSL’s services and programs, Thornton will be remembered as a person dedicated to excellence, and as a person who provided CSL with many years of outstanding service.

Untold story about Japanese Internment during WWII will air on PBS in November

After spending two years in prison and silently enduring 50 years of ostracism by their own communities, the young Japanese American men who refused to fight for the United States during World War II will have their story told in a PBS documentary, the creation of which was supported through a California State Library (CSL) grant.

As American citizens, these men refused to be drafted from the Heart Mountain, Wyoming, concentration camp until their civil rights were restored and their families released from the camp. Besides being the largest organized resistance to the incarceration of Japanese Americans, the actions of these men led to the largest trial for draft resistance in U.S. history.

Conscience and the Constitution, produced by former journalist and television news reporter Frank Abe, will recount the story of seven of these draft resisters, all from the Heart Mountain concentration camp, and will examine how the action of the draft resisters led to their prosecution by the federal government as criminals, their being labeled and ostracized as traitors by Japanese American leaders and veterans, and how this issue remains controversial, dividing many Japanese American communities even today.

The California Civil Liberties Public Education Program (CCLPEP), a project of CSL, was created in 1998 as the result of the passage of the California Civil Liberties Public Education Act. The CCLPEP’s competitive grant program provided funding for this documentary, as well as for other public educational activities or educational materials devoted to remembering and understanding the causes and events surrounding the exclusion, forced removal, and incarceration of civilians and permanent residents of Japanese ancestry. CCLPEP is currently announcing the availability of funding for projects for fiscal year 2000-2001.

The program will be broadcast on Thursday, November 30, at 10:00 p.m., but check local listings because the date and time may vary.

For general information about CCLPEP, visit www.library.ca.gov/ cclpep/ on the CSL website. For further information about CCLPEP, contact Diane Matsuda, program director, at (916) 653-9404, or by email at dmatsuda@library.ca.gov.

For information about Conscience and the Constitution, contact Al Bennett, library programs consultant, at (916) 653-7743, or by email at abennett@library.ca.gov.
